

Hereby I am stating I want to receive Voom's service continuously, which, I believe, will be seriously scaled down or shut down after this sale will be done.

The current state of the HDTV service is very sad at every provider nationwide - except Voom.

Besides this my options are already limited: the Avenue I live could be served by cable or satellite: the other two available satellite providers (DirecTV, Dish) together doesn't have half of the Voom's HD offerings, in terms of everything: number of channels, content, quality. On cable my choices even more limited: this area (Park Slope) on paper served by both Cablevision and Time Warner but in reality if you call CV they'll send you to their rival, Time Warner, stating they can't serve you which is obviously not true, according to their own database - so it's most likely some two-party monopoly game here.

The only real HD option is Voom, no question about it and if this deal will be allowed, we, Voom subscribers - including the ones who bought their equipment - most likely will lose our service.
